

Homeschool Curriculum & Educational Resources

NOTE: This resource sheet has been produced in response to requests for curriculum source assistance from new home educators. NICHE does not endorse any individual resource and we encourage you to search diligently to find curriculum materials which meet the academic and theological/philosophical bent of your own family. Please take the time to review the philosophy of the publishers in which you are interested, and weigh the pros and cons of each resource. Be sure to allow sufficient time before the beginning of your school year to order catalogs, check online sources, review the materials, order the curriculum, and allow for delivery of the materials. (This can take anywhere from 6-12 weeks.)

Traditional Textbook Publishers

These resources fall under what is considered a traditional teacher-instructional program using textbooks, teacher's guides, tests, and additional materials. They usually follow a traditional scope and sequence through a 180-day academic year. Textbook curricula assume you will structure your school similar to an institutional school.

Worktext Publishers

These resources present curriculum programs in a consumable workbook format. This structure allows more flexibility in time (the material is basically self-taught), but less flexibility in instruction. Minimal teacher preparation is required and the texts have numerous tests and checkpoints to ensure mastery of the material content.

Unit Study Publishers

These resources utilize a unit study approach to home education — building on a theme or topic while integrating language arts, science, social studies, math, and fine arts as they apply. Advantages include flexibility and subject & grade level integration. Disadvantages can include extra preparation time. Here are a few examples:
